The Yellow Ribbon Fund was started in Washington DC in 2005 by private citizens to provide support for injured service personnel returning home from military institutions such as Walter Reed, Fort Belvoir and others with traumatic wounds sustained in the field of battle. The YRF meets a tremendous range of critical and specific needs that fall outside the mandate of the nation's military medical and rehabilitation facilities. These needs include long and short-term housing for the families of injured service members, transportation, recreation, entertainment, mentoring and internships, holiday meals, and simple companionship during medical treatment and rehabilitation - which normally takes months or years and is often grueling and isolating.

The Yellow Ribbon Fund is a national

"May I have a hug? I want to thank you since I heard you say you're with the Yellow Ribbon Fund - you brought my family together."

"To YRF, Your part in our stay here (Walter Reed) was invaluable..."

"The hardest thing of being a caregiver is always making sure you keep your spirits up. The YRF has given me time for myself...to forget about the problems..."
